The researchers looked at symptom prevalence of depression, anxiety, Covid-19 related distress, and post-traumatic stress among people with and without a diagnosis of Covid-19 from 6-8 months.

Of the 347,239 people included, 9,979 (2.9%) were diagnosed with Covid-19 between February 20 and August 2021.

"It suggests that mental health effects are not equal for all Covid-19 patients and that time spent bedridden is a key factor in determining the severity of the impacts on mental health," Valdimarsdottir said.
